IT'S OFTEN SAID THE GREAT AUSTRALIAN DREAM

is to own your own home, but it's more than that. It's to live in a community where we feel welcome, where we belong.

Take a second to think about the home you have the fondest memories of. Maybe it was the house you grew up in, or a shared house full of youthful vitality and independence, or maybe the home where you raised a family of your own.

It's a fair bet that back then you not only knew who your neighbours were, but you socialised together, celebrating the highs and supporting each other through the lows.

AVJennings believes community matters. It's why it designs its master-planned residential communities to not only be a great place to live but foster a sense of community.

They've been doing that since 1932 when Sir Albert Jennings mortgaged his own home during the Great Depression to start a company focussed on providing quality, affordable housing to aspirational Australians. After 87 years, nothing has changed.
